

Chief Max Patterson Re-Dedication Ceremony

In May of 1991, The Clackamette Optimist Club dedicated a United States Flag to Chief Max Patterson for his service and dedication to the Gladstone community.

On July 4, 2022, the City of Gladstone rededicated a flag to the memory of Chief Max Patterson.

Chief Patterson lived in the Gladstone area for more than 40 years, attending grade school in Gladstone, graduate of West Linn High School and attended Portland State University.

Words used to describe Chief Patterson were “dignity” and “integrity”. He was also described as a true friend of the Gladstone Community.

Chief Patterson served as a Gladstone Reserve Officer from 1962-1970 and rose to the rank of Chief of Police in 1981 through 1990.

Chief Patterson is a graduate of the FBI National Academy, session 108 in 1977.

A Minute of Gladstone History – by Kim Argraves Huey,

It's Summer! Let's go fishing...and maybe solve a mystery?

In 1899, a 25-year-old Rudyard Kipling (pictured on the left) went fishing in the Clackamas River and immortalized his adventure in the book 'From Sea to Sea – Letters of Travel'. In 2012, Debra Wynn, a cataloger at the Library of Congress, recommended to the Oregon Geographic Names Board, that an 18-foot-high rock located in the Clackamas River, a little east of Carver, be named Kipling's Rock in honor of Kipling's momentous fishing adventure. After all, that rock is in the vicinity and it's really old. Therefore, it could have witnessed Kipling pulling salmon out the river. Old-timers even suggested that Kipling "might have" fished from that rock...a fish tale since there are no corroborating facts. In February 2014, the rock received its new name.

So, where did old-timers of a hundred years ago think Kipling fished? From local newspapers: April 1900: "R. Kipling angled at the Clackamas Fishery." November 1901: "The Clackamas Fishery is 7 miles from the junction of the Clackamas and Willamette River." December 1910: "R. Kipling caught his famous salmon a few miles above the junction of the two rivers." October 1913: "R. Kipling took his salmon where a great power dam is to be constructed by a Portland Company (never built) near the Clear Creek Creamery (Carver)." February 1914: "The people of Gladstone aver that R. Kipling fished two miles north of Oregon City (or east edge of Gladstone)." April 1915: "R. Kipling fished at Oregon City." Obviously, as time goes on, details get less precise for old-timers of any era.

However, Kipling did provide some information about his great fishing adventure in his book. The following is a paraphrase: June 23: Starting in Portland, the fishing was fifteen miles away to "a place called Clackamas". People told him the roads were not good and overwhelmed him with directions to sawmills, ferries, and signposts. Leaving Portland, he travelled first on a plank road and then six miles on a macadamized road. A railroad (interurban trolley) ran between him and the banks of the Willamette. On arriving at Clackamas, he found a stream that flowed amid fields of crops surrounded by hills of pines and a hundred-foot bluff. The river broke over a weir (an old dam or a fish fence) about a quarter mile away. The fishing area was seventy yards broad and divided by a pebbly island.

So, where do "you" think Kipling fished? Perhaps the mystery can never be solved, but one thing is for certain. It is extremely unlikely that Kipling fished at Gladstone. However, considering the route he described to the Clackamas River, it is very possible he passed through the edge of Gladstone. For further sleuthing, download a free copy of Kipling's book. <https://archive.org/details/fromseatosealet02kiplgoog>. "Gladstone's Amazing Past" Part 2 & 3 presentations at Somerset Lodge have been rescheduled to Aug. 18 and Sept. 15. @ 2:30 pm. Public invited.

Starting May 3, 2023, Oregonians will need to show a different form of ID to get through airport security. That is when the TSA will stop accepting standard Oregon driver license or ID card. That new ID requirement also applies at other federal facilities such as military bases. If you usually travel with your Oregon license, permit or ID card you need to be prepared to act before your next flight. Here are the three key things you need to know to be Real ID ready:

1. You will need to visit a DMV to be issued a Real ID compliant license, permit or ID card. The most convenient time to make the switch is when you are renewing your card, but you may need to replace it earlier if you know you plan to travel.
2. Additional documents are required to issue a Real ID. Go to Oregon.gov/realID to create a handy checklist of documents to bring with you
3. Getting a Real ID card from Oregon DMV is a choice. There are many forms of Real ID credentials you may already have and can use for travel – the most common is a passport or passport card.
